One of my co-workers is a hardcore gamer and power user. Since we've met, he's become more and more interested in the hardware aspect of computing, and recently asked me to help build him a new system.

He previously had a Phenom II X4 940 based system with 4GB of memory and dual GTX 260 graphics cards. Everything was run at stock speeds as he preferred to spend his time gaming as opposed to tweaking. Although his system was no slouch, as any hardcore gamer knows; the faster, the better! Plus, getting to know me has obviously had an influence on him (hehehe). So we set upon building him a new rig from the ground up with the intent to have a very powerful gaming system with excellent performance today, and future expandability for tomorrow.
