

Part 2 - Assembly, Painting, and Health Tank

Written by TiTON

Thursday, 27 March 2008 04:23 -

---

Part 2 – Assembly, Painting, and Health Tank

After cutting a top and bottom board for the case, it was time to assemble the main frame. To make sure the Dispenser wouldn't fall apart, I used a combination of wood glue, and wood screws. I predrilled pilot holes, as well as countersink, to prevent the boards from splitting.

Part 2 - Assembly, Painting, and Health Tank

Written by TiTON

Thursday, 27 March 2008 04:23 -

---

Mesh filter was installed with a MDE drill over the screw holes, as well as the seams. This is

After the frame is finished, it was time to paint. A couple of coats of gray primer and blue paint,

Part 2 - Assembly, Painting, and Health Tank

Written by TiTON

Thursday, 27 March 2008 04:23 -

---

For the front piece of the dispenser, hammered bronze paint was used to give it a metallic appearance.

Part 2 - Assembly, Painting, and Health Tank

Written by TiTON

Thursday, 27 March 2008 04:23 -

both functional fire extinguishers were used for the first time. A State of Oregon fire official was able to

Part 2 - Assembly, Painting, and Health Tank

Written by TiTON

Thursday, 27 March 2008 04:23 -

---

Part 2 - Assembly, Painting, and Health Tank

Written by TiTON

Thursday, 27 March 2008 04:23 -

---

Finish it for now. Till the next post!! :)